

Sergeant Annalise Shearer possesses extensive knowledge in the realm of law enforcement policies and procedures. Her expertise lies in various areas, including the utilization of force, tactical strategies, de-escalation techniques, risk management, patrol operations, and the effective command and control of critical incidents.

With over 15 years of experience, Sergeant Shearer is a seasoned veteran of the Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD). In her current role as an adjutant in the Operations-Central Bureau, she is responsible for the review and management of patrol functions of five patrol divisions within the LAPD. Specifically, she is responsible for the review of use of force, pursuit, and critical incidents. With prior supervisory assignments to include patrol sergeant and watch commander, during which she supervised patrol operations and managed numerous critical and crowd management incidents.

During her tenure with the LAPD she has been responsible for the review and adjudication of over 200 officer involved shootings, in-custody deaths, K-9 contacts, and serious law enforcement related injuries. Sergeant Shearer has spoken on Use of Force and de-escalation and is one of a few Advanced Force Specialists from the Force Science Institute.